

schedule... just like all other employees.

^ | v Reply Share >

 milkbone99 → JasonROlsen · 19 hours ago

Here is a link to the supers salary for the last 10 years. You can see that last year he got his salary plus a bonus plus an annuity and much more. To say his raise and bonus are "just like all other employees." is a LIE. He gets that and more.

<http://michaelclara.com/wp-con...>

1 ^ | v Reply Share >

 JasonROlsen → milkbone99 · 5 hours ago

Yes, I have seen that information. The superintendent has received an annuity and can qualify for a once a year bonus at the end of each year if he passes his board evaluation. He has been receiving these for years. So, do they constitute a raise, as was originally contended, if they are not new additions to his compensation? I guess everyone can answer that question for themselves.

I know for a fact the increase on his regular paycheck is not even close to 6%. It is close to 1%, as I describe above.

^ | v Reply Share >

 Bone_spurred → JasonROlsen · 4 hours ago

How much is this bonus and why do not the teachers qualify for it? Paint it anyway you want he is receiving a raise in salary that teachers don't get. You're starting to sound like Jay Carney

^ | v Reply Share >

 Ericched → JasonROlsen · 2 days ago